

To all and sundry, greetings!

I would like to add my six-penneth in praise of Dr Qi Xin Chen.

Six years ago aged 64 I discovered to my complete surprise that I had aggressive cancer of the prostate. I had the gland removed and for a year I was apparently clear of cancer. But a few malignant cells had escaped the prostate capsule and gone walk about, destination unknown. Best guess was the capsule bed, which was consequently bombarded with a full course of radiation treatment. For a year and a half things again appeared successful but then my PSA level began to rise.

Western medicine had one non-surgical life-preserving option involving virtual chemical castration using female hormonal implants. This has the effect of cutting off the male hormone testosterone, which is the food supply for the tumour. My understanding was that the implant therapy is only good for about a couple of year's continuous application. Therefore, I had to quickly find a way myself to expand the envelope.

I turned to alternative medicine and knew through a mutual friend of Dr Chen's success in treating various forms of cancer. He was able to build up my immune system and thus hold back further development of the tumour for a couple of years, until my body no longer derived benefit from his medicine. Dr Chen has in fact already given me two extra years of normal life.

Immediately after stopping herbal treatment for cancer the tumour redeveloped aggressively and I have started hormonal treatment with three-monthly implants, which I hope to be able to extend out to six-monthly applications. When I become immune to the Western hormonal therapy my hope is to alternate successfully with Dr Chen's Traditional Chinese Medicine.

A couple of years ago something once again hit me hard out of left field. I had become very short of breath and had a constant little phlegmy cough. High-resolution CAT scan confirmed that I had pulmonary fibrosis – incurable hardening of the lungs. The only Western treatment on offer was massive doses of cortizone and the side effects could be devastating. Dr Chen immediately came to my rescue and I now breathe normally, do not cough and over a fourteen-month period the disease has only worsened just a tad.

I still lead a normal life with my wonderful wife and family and work part-time.

The man's a marvel! Thank you Dr Chen.
